Firemen Beat Old-Timers 23 to 12

It was a big night in Frankfort last Monday evening when the Frankfort Fire Department members played a softball game with the Old Timers. The score turned out to be 23 to 12 in favor of the Firemen.

Therefore another game will be played this coming Monday evening in Frankfort starting at 7:30 o'clock to even that score, so the Old Timers say. And the Firemen say "we'll see." Sounds like it will be worth seeing, too!

Thrilling Events At Air Show Tomorrow

Local flyers will be in fast company during the CAP-AAF Air Show—the greatest, most spectacular Air Show ever to be held in Illinois, scheduled for September 21st, at Rubinkam Airport, 167 Street and Western Avenue, beginning at 2 p. m.

Lt. Col. Gordon Da Costa, Commander of the Illinois State Wing, has announced that a P-80 "Shooting Star" jet plane will streak low and often across the runways at a speed well over 400 miles per hour—then climb straight up into the sky until out of sight. The P-80 and a large group of AAF planes, featuring at least six of the most famous types, will participate in loops, rolls, simulated straffing and bombing attacks on a B-29 Superfortress and other war action, thus giving the public of Illinois a first chance to closely witness such maneuvers.

Thrills will be sustained when small civilian planes xxxx are put through their paces by well-known pilots of this vicinity. Three Flight Instructors will perform an aerial act they are famous for. Ray Starzyk, 3010 W. Cermack, Chicago, Roy Cleveland, 71357 69th Avenue, Tinley Park, and Richard "Bud" Porter, 9753 S. Hoyne, Chicago, will tuck their plane wings excitingly close for formation maneuvers, then flare out into solo aerobatics.

Civil Air Patrol pilots will give vivid flight demonstrations of service they voluntarily performed in their own planes during the war. Also, they will show how Civil Air Patrol stands ready to perform in peace-time emergencies.

Art Lindstrom, a Civil Air Patrol member from Mattoon, Illinois, will attempt to make a new record of spins. Recently, he made one hundred and twenty-five consecutive spins in a light plane. Parachute jumping is included on the program.

The Strato-Cats of Harvey, Illinois, amateurs who fly gas-driven miniature planes will give a short demonstration of their models and their skill. The youngest member of the club is 12 years old Donald Ore, other ages range to 45. The demonstration will be under the supervision of the "Cats" president, Richard Knapp and Vice president Bob Friske.

Ground exhibits include AAF and Enemy War equipment, a Hospital Ship and many of the latest civilian planes. Mayor's from 25 towns and villages surrounding Rubinkam Airport are among prominent civic leaders invited to attend the show.

All proceeds will be used for patriotic activities within this state. The AAF deem it vital that CAP Cadets (youths from 15 to 17 years) be trained in Aviation fundamentals. Ample car parking space will be provided. Pilots in visiting aircraft are advised to bring their own "tie-downs" and land on Rubinkam the Saturday of the show prior to 12 noon.

Tickets are available from all CAP personnel, at local airports, and from Marshall Field's and Lytton's stores in their Aviation Display Sections.

To Celebrate 30 Years In Business Saturday

To have been in business continually for thirty years is surely some record, especially so, when we recall that during that period, there have been two wars, with their resulting depression and inflation. To have weathered such storms is a record to be proud of. Such is the privilege of the Cooper & Hostert firm who have conducted a garage in Mokena for that length of time.

It was Thursday, September 21, 1919, when Elmer Cooper and Barney Hostert, having built a garage fronting on First street in Mokena, opened their doors for business, doing all kinds of repair work and selling Ford cars.

Their patronage was good and business increased. Then came World War I, and Barney Hostert went to war, and in his absence Mr. Cooper carried on alone, but not quite alone for he had a small son, who was 11 years old when the garage first opened, and now he was able to be of some help to his father. But boys will be boys and at a certain age, they all seem to know a great deal; so father and son had many interesting moments in making decisions, etc.

But the war ended and Barney Hostert returned and in 1922 Cooper & Hostert bought the garage of Mr. Albert Hellmuth, doing business under the firm name of Hentsch & Hellmuth, and which garage fronted on Front street directly back of their own garage.

age. They moved into that building and reserved their old garage as a storage place.

In the meantime, the small boy we mentioned Harold Cooper, who had now grown in stature, went to the Ford factory to learn all the inside workings of a Ford car, and several years later he joined the firm as chief mechanic, and is still with them, in that capacity, and also as bookkeeper.

It so happened on the day they opened for business, a man who was driving his car near by, broke down, and he went to the new garage to have it repaired. That man is still a customer and also the man who purchased the first Ford car from this firm is still a customer.

Cooper & Hostert will have their garage open from 5:30 to 9:30 Saturday evening in observance of their 30th birthday and the party who purchased the first Ford and the party who was their first customer will be present. But another party will be present also, for at 5:30 this thirty-year-old firm will make their latest delivery, a new 1946 Ford at the garage.

Congratulations to Cooper & Hostert who have continuously worked under this same firm name for 30 years, and to the small son, who has gained a "few" pounds by now, and is doing a good job of supplying excellent service to all cars in trouble.

MRS. CAPPEL DISCUSSES HEALTH PROBLEMS

Many persons in this vicinity listened with interest Wednesday evening when Mrs. Elizabeth Cappel, principal of Mokena public school took part on the weekly broadcast of the Will County Health program over Station WJOL.

Mrs. Cappel was introduced by Rev. Paul Saunders, pastor of the Marley church who has been interested in this health program, enough so, to give of his time each week on the broadcast.

In reply to Mr. Saunders' question, "How do you feel toward the work of the County Health Department in your school?" Mrs. Cappel said: "We would have no way of helping parents guard the health of their children if it were not for the county health department. We cannot do a real job of education when a child is in ill health, not only because he is apt to miss school, but also because when he is in school, he cannot learn as quickly or as thoroughly as can a well child."

Mrs. Cappel mentioned the physical and dental examinations which the laws of Illinois require each four years and of the splendid work which Miss Mary Jones, county nurse in the Mokena area, is doing among the people.

Another important work done by the Health department is the immunization program, which protects a child from diphtheria, small pox, etc., when parents take advantage of it.

2. Shall the Will County Survey Committee recommend reorganization that will do away with all the non-high territory of the County?

3. Shall the Will County School Survey Committee recommend changes in present high school district boundaries?

PTA Gives $700 Ann Rutledge School

To help defray the cost of building an addition to the Ann Rutledge school, the Parent-Teacher organization in the district has made a donation of $700 to the board of directors.

The new classroom is considered a step in providing better educational facilities for the youngsters of that sector. Previously, 52 children had been attending the one-room building with two teachers in charge. With the completion of the new addition, there will be two classrooms, with each teacher having four grades, and approximately 26 students to the room.

In announcing the gift of the Parent-Teacher group in the district, County Superintendent of Schools L. F. Bottino commended the organization for its outstanding work in the promotion of education. He also paid tribute to the other PTA groups in the county. "So long as they continue to function and do the good job they have in in the past, there is little cause for alarm for the future of our country," he explained.

District 156, known as the Ann Rutledge school district, has voted an increase in the educational tax levy from $1 to $1.50 and from 3 1/4 to 50 cents in the building fund. Despite the added revenue, the needs of the district could not be met properly because of a large increase in the enrollment, it was pointed out.

Board members and the PTA have been contributing much time and effort to bettering the educational facilities for the children of the district, Bottino said. The money given to the district by the parent-teacher group was raised through community activities including bakery sales and various programs.

Method of Paying Off Insurance Compensation

There has been considerable confusion as to the method of payment of insurance. The original law provided that the insurance policy would not be paid in one lump sum. The amendment approved on August 1, 1946, however, gives the beneficiary the privilege to elect within two years the refund life income settlement in which event an appropriate adjustment will be made to take into account the payments already drawn by the beneficiary.

It is the duty of the Veterans' administration to notify beneficiaries who are eligible for this privilege by registered mail some time before August 1, 1947.

Those who are eligible should study all plans carefully. While the lump sum payment may seem advisable at the time, future needs must be considered. In many cases it will be to the beneficiary's benefit to receive the monthly payments, for from three to twenty years.

This is a matter that should be handled by each individual according to his needs. The local Red Cross will be glad to go into the various plans. Before determining which method of payment to accept, it would be well to consult the Red Cross as well as banker or other party who is well informed on the various merits of each plan.

Peach Tree Borer PDB Control Urged

Pest Biggest Peach Problem in America

By W. J. DRYDEN

Fall is the time to forestall the 1946 peach borer. Material increase in the average productive life of peach trees can be brought about by the effective control of peach tree borers.

Masses of gum mixed with sawdust-like refuse at or near the base of the trees reveal the presence of infestations. The injury may extend about a foot above or below the ground line.

Best control is obtained by applying powdered crystalline paradichloro-benzene (PDB) to the ground in a ring around the tree as shown in the illustration. The ring should be mounded with three to five spadefuls of earth.

The amount of PDB to be used will depend upon the age of the tree. For trees 1 year old, use ½ ounce; 2 years old, ¾ ounce; 3 to 5 years old, 1 ounce, and for older trees, from 1 to 2 ounces.

Know Your Breed Jerseys

Originating in the Island of Jersey, the Jersey breed of dairy cattle first was imported into the United States about 1850.

Jerseys are said to be more evenly distributed in the United States than any other breed. They possess to a great degree those qualities ideal for dairy types. Alert, clean-cut, angular and refined in conformation they still have large barrels.

Their milk test is right and cost of butterfat production is low. Average butterfat content is 5.35 per cent, highest of all breeds.

Fall Versus Spring Fertilized Pastures

It is becoming increasingly evident from tests at New Jersey station and other states that except on very sandy soils fertilizers containing nitrogen for grassland and pasture sods, may be applied in late summer or early fall.

Fertilizers containing phosphoric acid and potash only, such as the mixtures usually recommended for alfalfa and Ladino clover fields, can be even more efficiently applied in the fall than in the spring.

Mineral Hopper for Hens

Laying hens and growing chicks need a constant supply of calcium in form of oyster shell or limestone. This hopper may be hung on the wall of the chicken house.

Conquering Flax Wilt

By Resistant Strains

During the early 20th century the flax industry was faced with a serious problem. Flax-sickness" was making the industry unprofitable. It was found that "flax-sickness" was the result of a flax disease called wilt. This wilt fungus was introduced into the new soil when cropped to flax, where it lived and multiplied ready to attack later flax crops. The remedy was the introduction of new wilt-resistant varieties of flax.

Double-Cross Corn Not Fit for Reproduction

All plants in a field of corn planted with hybrid seed of a given strain are related—first cousins. The seed coming from such a field is definitely inbred and should not be saved for seed, points out the USDA. Reduction in vigor and grain yield is always the result of inbreeding in corn. The alternative is to plant each year the freshly crossed seed of tested strains of hybrid corn.

WHETHER it is Eddie Dyer's Cardinals or Leo Durocher's Dodgers who will be called on to meet Joe Cronin's Red Sox this fall, there is one basic idea you can keep in mind—neither National league team is going to surrender in advance.

No other teams in baseball have been so well seasoned under fire from April into the final September stretch.

There has been no resting spot for either club — no loafing time or any recess in the day-by-day battle for the top. Both Cardinals and Dodgers by now should have steel-shod nerves under the pressure that has kept both teams hustling to the limit in an all summer dog fight that has been one of the best in many years.

Both Cardinals and Dodgers are loaded with dead-game ball players out to give all they have—such men as Pete Reiser, Pee-wee Reese, Ed Stankey, Dixie Walker, Stan Musial, Marty Marion, Country Slaughter, Whitey Kurowski, Terry Moore and others from both scrappy camps.

Their batting records show no such power as the Red Sox command. Howie Pollet may be their only 20-game winner. But there is more than enough class on either team to give anyone a battle over the sprint route that a world series calls for. While neither Musial nor Walker has been able to turn on Ted Williams' power, both have been out-hitting the Red Sox star through the greater part of the year.

The averages tell you that. Reiser, in condition, is one of the most valuable ball players baseball can show when you consider his worth at bat, in a pinch, in the field and around the bases.

The averages and the records of the field also prove that Musial is quite likely to out-hit Williams by a rather wide margin; not in the way of home runs, but in league leadership. Musial is one of the finest hitters we've seen in many years. His lifetime average is close to Williams', who has slipped a trifle from .356 to something around .353, which isn't too soggy for several years.

Outside of Musial and Walker, neither Cardinals nor Dodgers has other run-making hitters to match Pesky, Doerr and York, slashing Ted's three aiding musketeers.

Eddie Dyer on Pitching

After all, the pitching can play a star part in any world series, as pitching usually does.

We were talking with Eddie Dyer, the Cardinal manager, about this section of the world series argument.

"In the first place," Dyer said, "the Cardinals haven't yet won the National league pennant this season. The Dodgers are a tough team to catch and shake loose. They don't seem to discourage easily. But if the Cardinals do manage to break in and get a shot at the Red Sox, I have a rather hazy idea our pitching staff can worry them a lot."

"We have some left-handers that Williams and a number of others might not like too well. And if George Munger can work back to his old form in the next few weeks, we'll have our share of good right-handers to match any staff — and that includes the Red Sox staff."

No one can be sure yet just how good the Red Sox pitching is. There have been too many games where a Red Sox pitcher could dish out a flock of hits and runs, and yet breeze home. We were rather astonished to see that Dave Ferris and Tex Hughson, two Red Sox mainstays, had allowed more hostile hits than any two pitchers in their circuit. Both had been tapped safely well over 200 times, where Spud Chandler had allowed only 151 hits and Hal Newhouser only 173, far below the Ferris-Hughson totals.

The Red Sox have wrecked the American league through a killing margin in runs, base hits and runs batted in. Their stampede has been based on raw power, on attack, not on defense.

Hughson, undoubtedly one of the best pitchers now at work, has had a rather spotty year, being slightly over the .500 mark with a great run-making machine at his back. Ferris has been their star workman, but even the able Ferris has absorbed his share of manhandling more than once.

Red Sox No Cinch Bet

The Red Sox will be favored to win, but anyone who makes them lopsided favorites can be labelled a trifle curious in the cupola. As all around good as the Red Sox are, and they are good enough, up and down the line, they are no invincible, overwhelming force against either of the two fast, game outfits.

The main burden of proof is also on broad Red Sox backs who are expected by too many camp followers to win a four or five game romp.

We have an idea it won't be quite

THE STORY THUS FAR:

The crew of a small sailing vessel in the Caribbean pick up Dick Jordan, adrift on a raft. He realizes that he is among men little better than pirates. They come upon a drifting schooner with only two people aboard, the demented captain and his daughter, Rose. Tucu and his pirates capture the schooner and search fruitlessly for the "treasure." Then Tucu goes away, because a storm is brewing. Dick swims to the schooner, arriving just in time to rescue Rose from two of the pirates. Captain Bedford recovers and they sail to an island. Dick discovers that Tucu and his crew are on the other side. They are battling a group of white men.

CHAPTER X

The Caribs were checked again by a volley of stones, and withdrew after that to a safe distance, while Burley and Tucu held a consultation.

Dick struggled to his feet, a little bewildered and uncertain what course to pursue. There were six white men, now that Pettigrew had been killed, and a dozen Caribs attacking them, an even disposition of forces, perhaps if they had been equally equipped for battle—for one white man could ordinarily handle two Caribs—but armed with pistols that their enemies lacked the black men had the advantage. They could pick off their enemies leisurely without running any risk from flying stones, and in the end conquer through their superior weapons.

"Captain Bedford may have pistols or rifles that Tucu overlooked," Dick reasoned. "With two or three we could rout the Caribs."

Animated by this thought, he turned and began scrambling down the rocks, scarring his hands and knees and nearly losing his balance once or twice through careless haste. Rose saw him coming, and waved to him; Dick gave no heed to her until he stood on the deck, hot, flushed, and panting:

"Captain Tucu's gang's on the other side of the island!" he announced abruptly.

Rose recoiled and turned deathly white, but Captain Bedford's face set in hard lines without a trace of fear in it. "Then we must get ready for them," he said grimly. "Did they see ye?"

"No, but I saw them." The old skipper nodded. "Can ye shoot?"

"Yes, if I had anything to shoot with. Tucu disarmed me, and took every weapon off the schooner." "Did he?" The skipper's face was wreathed in a crafty smile. "I reckon now," he added a moment later, "he overlooked some of 'em."

Reinforcements Come From the Schooner

Leading the way into the cabin, with Dick and Rose eagerly following, he began prying up a section of the floor. After loosening a few boards he lifted out a small chest hidden underneath, which, when opened, disclosed a treasure more precious to Dick than the gold taken from the submarine. It consisted of half a dozen brand-new pistols of modern pattern, automatics of a deadly type, with ammunition enough to feed them for a considerable time.

"We could clean 'em up alone, but maybe it would be better to get down to the sailors, an' let 'em have some sort of fun. Reckon they'd enjoy it," grinned the captain.

"Yes," nodded Dick, "we must have nearly enough guns for all. We must hurry."

They started up the companion, but when they climbed over the side of the schooner to get ashore Rose suddenly protested.

"Aren't you going to help me ashore, Dick?"

"No," he replied gravely, "you must stay on the Betty. We'll come back to you."

She sniffed and tossed her head in the air. "If Father's going I'm going too," she answered.

Dick started to protest further, but Captain Bedford nudged him. "No use arguin'," he whispered. "I've spoilt her. She always has her way."

With a smile she acknowledged this doubtful compliment, and climbed down to the mass of wreckage.

When they reached the summit of the cliff, the situation below was not changed. The Caribs were still at a safe distance, shooting occasionally at the breastwork behind which the white men were crouched. Their bullets went wide of the mark, which induced Captain Bedford to remark, "Ye can't never teach a Carib to shoot straight. 'Tain't born in 'em. Reckon we'll show 'em how to do it."

Dick had been scanning the rocks below with a careful estimate of the danger ahead. The shipwrecked men had reached the upper part of the beach, and it was possible to get within a hundred feet of them without exposing their bodies by following closely a ridge of outcropping boulders. When he indicated this to Captain Bedford, the old skipper nodded, and waited for him to lead.

Once more Dick urged Rose to remain behind, but she stubbornly shook her head and prepared to follow.

The Caribs had their attention directed upon the breastwork of their enemies, and, not expecting danger from above, they never once raised their eyes to the summit of the cliff. This more than any skill on their part enabled the three to creep stealthily down the ridge until close to the hiding place of the sailors. Crouching there for a moment they considered the next move. Between them and the breastwork was an open stretch of flat sand. To cross this they had to expose their bodies to the cross fire of the Caribs.

"I'll go first," Dick whispered. "No, wait a minute," replied the skipper. "Likely's not them sailors will take ye for a flankin' party an' land a ton of stones on yer head. We got to let 'em know we're friends."

"How can we do it without alarmin' the Caribs?"

"Reckon we can't. But it's got to be done."

Suddenly, without warning of his intentions, the skipper raised his voice without exposing his head: "Ahoy, there, shipmates! Look

There was a puff of smoke and a sharp report.

aloft! Keep them stuns for the enemy, an' don't shy any of 'em aft! We're comin' to help ye."

The surprise and consternation of the sailors at the voice behind them was not greater than that of the Caribs. Dick saw Captain Tucu and Black Burley jump to their feet and scan the rocks with eager eyes.

"I reckon now ye can go," Captain Bedford whispered. "Ye're spyin' n me, an' can make it quicker."

"Give me all except two of the pistols," replied Dick. "You and Rose keep one apiece. Don't expose yourself. Keep Rose here with you."

"Reckon I ain't promisin' to keep her here," grinned the skipper, "but I'll try it."

The Automatics Turn the Tide

Dick nodded, and then vaulted the low ridge of rocks, and, crouching low, made a break across the open space. His sudden appearance was the signal for a volley of shots from the Caribs, but in anticipation of this he dodged and ducked so erratically that the bullets buried themselves in the sand at a safe distance on either side.

The sailors, forewarned, made no hostile demonstration, but watched him with gaping mouths and wide-open eyes. When he finally landed plump in their midst, they stretched forth arms to receive him. Recovering his breath, Dick said:

"Now give them hell! Shoot to kill!"

The sight of the guns he began passing around brought grins of delight to the haggard faces.

"I haven't enough for all," Dick added. "So be careful. Who among you are the best shots?"

"I've killed a man at a hundred feet," replied a burly seaman, taking a gun, "an' my mate's nearly as good. Give him one."

The other two were handed to men who declared they were good shots, and were anxious to try their skill on the Caribs. Dick took charge and directed the shooting.

"They're cowards, and will run the moment we shoot," he said. "They don't know we're armed. So make the best of our chance. Single out our men, and shoot together."

He counted two and then raised a hand as a signal. Four vicious bullets sped toward their marks, and before they were well on their way others were following them. The automatics barked so continuously that half the Caribs were down before the others could duck for shelter.

The sailors wanted to break cover and charge, but Dick restrained them. "No, they'll get some of you.

Keep covered until we get Tucu and Burley. The rest will surrender." "Who's Tucu—their leader?" asked one of the seamen.

"Yes, he's the captain of the lugger, and Black Burley's the mate."

"Know 'em?"

"Sure. I've sailed with them."

The sailors eyed him curiously. In the lull that followed, one asked:

"Wasn't ye on the City of Bahia?"

Dick nodded.

"Thought I remembered yer face. Got away, did ye?"

Further conversation was interrupted by the unexpected barking of a gun far on their right. For a moment they thought a flanking party had crept up behind them; but almost simultaneously with the crash of the report there came a cry from the enemy. They saw a gigantic black man leap in the air and tumble face downward.

"Black Burley!" exclaimed Dick.

"Who shot him?" asked one of the sailors, uneasily glancing in the direction of the shot.

"Captain Bedford," smiled Dick. "He's trying to flank them."

The rest of the Caribs, with Tucu leading, had leaped from cover, and were making a run for their last refuge.

"After them!" yelled Dick, springing over the breastwork. "Don't let Tucu escape."

Dick led the assaulting party, but Tucu had a big start. It looked for a time as if he would escape, and Dick hesitated between keeping up the race and stopping to shoot. Perhaps in either case he would have lost if Tucu's vengeful nature hadn't temporarily handicapped him.

Hen Pettigrew lay directly in his path, where he had been left by the Caribs for dead; but Hen had as many lives as a cat, and despite the fact that he carried three bullets in his body he was a long way from being dead. He sat up and began struggling feebly to get on his feet. He was not aware of Tucu's presence until the latter stopped suddenly in his steps.

The sight of one of his enemies escaping when he could kill him was too much of a strain on Tucu's nature. He decided to linger long enough to put Hen out of the game. With a malevolent glint in his eyes, he leered at the half-dazed man, and said:

"I reckon y'don't need to get up."

He could have shot him on the run, but he wanted to make sure this time. He brought his gun close to Hen's head, thrusting it viciously between his eyes so he could stare his fate directly in the face. It was a brutal, bloodthirsty act, and for a moment Hen recoiled.

"Damn ye, take that!" grunted the half-breed.

Dick Saves the Life Of His Nemesis

There was an explosion, so close that the powder blackened Hen's face, but the bullet buried itself in the sand as Tucu's right hand dropped to his side, with the forearm broken close to the wrist.

Dick had taken advantage of his hesitation and shot at the hand holding the gun to Hen's face, pausing to aim carefully and deliberately to make sure he did not miss.

With a snarl and curse, the half-breed grasped his wounded wrist in his free hand, and seeing that escape was impossible he turned upon Dick like an enraged animal. All the venom of his nature flared up in his eyes.

Dick could have shot easily, but he hesitated. The man was wounded and unarmed, his gun having fallen to the ground. He could not shoot Tucu even when he had him at his mercy.

"It's all up, Tucu," he said, smiling as he advanced. "I won't kill you if you'll surrender. You can't get away."

"Y'won't shoot me if I surrender?" whined the half-breed. "Y'won't let 'em kill me?"

"No, we'll give you a fair trial, but you don't deserve it."

Tucu's shifty eyes seemed to lose their fire, and Dick noticed that the limp arm was bleeding freely. "I'll help you," he added, kicking the man's gun away to a safe distance. "That arm must be broken."

Although in the act of kicking Tucu's gun away, he showed that he didn't trust the outlaw. Dick was careless in another respect. He thrust his own gun in his pocket. The half-breed noticed the action and almost immediately his whole attitude changed. A murderous gleam flashed in his eyes.

With his left hand he jerked an ugly knife from his belt and made a lunge at Dick. The attack was so sudden and unexpected that there was no time for counter action. Dick had barely time to catch the uplifted arm and save himself from almost instant death.

With a growl of rage that his ruse had failed, the half-breed struggled to release his arm for another blow; but Dick flung himself upon the outlaw, grasping the arm with one hand and the knife with the other.

Although wounded, and one arm helpless, Tucu, who was a giant in strength, fought ferociously, succeeding finally in hurling his enemy from him through sheer muscular superiority.

JESUS AND THE LAW OF THE STRANGER

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 22:21-23; Deuteronomy 24:14, 15; Matthew 23:34-41.

MEMORY SELECTION—The King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.—Matthew 25:40.

There is as much need today for the words of counsel and admonition regarding strangers which we find in our lesson, as there was in the days of Moses, for there seems to be an almost complete breakdown of neighborliness both between nations and individuals.

I. The Law Required Neighborliness (Exod. 22:21-23; Deut. 24:14, 15).

Our heavenly Father as revealed to us in his Word is a Father indeed, one greatly concerned about his many children; but especially does he care for those who are weak and needy.

The laws of ancient Israel made provision for the feeding of those who had no fields. The corners of the field were left uncut at harvest-time, some of the grapes were to be left on the vine, etc., so that the poor could enjoy the sense of self-respect as they picked for themselves what God had provided (see Lev. 19:9, 10; 23:22; Deut. 24:19-21, and other passages).

The poor man who found work was to receive his pay when needed. For the one who hired him to do otherwise was to bring upon himself the judgment of God. He listens to the cry of the hungry worker and his family (Deut. 24:15).

Strangers were in a peculiar way subject to the possibility of extortion. They are even today the easy mark of the one who lives by his wits, the "confidence" man and sneak thief.

If any such person reads these notes let me warn him solemnly to keep his tricky hands off the stranger, for God is watching and will hear their cry (Exod. 22:23).

The same is true of widows and orphans. God is their keeper and their defender.

Someone may say that all this is Old Testament in its background and principle. What about the follower of Christ in our day? The answer is that

II. Christ Expects Neighborliness (Matt. 23:34-41).

This is a prophetic picture of a great judgment scene. It is not, as many suppose, the same as the judgment of the Great White Throne of Revelation 20.

The scene here is not in heaven, but upon the earth. It is not individuals who are being judged, but the nations of the earth. They are not being judged regarding personal salvation, but for their treatment of Christ's brethren.

Who are his brethren? First we think of his brethren, after the flesh, the people of the Jewish race. Scripture reveals again and again that God is watching over his chosen people, even though they are now scattered in judgment for their unbelief. He will not hold any guiltless who harm his people (Gen. 12:1-3).

The word "brethren" is also used in such a passage as Matthew 12:46-50 to include all who do the will of God. That suggests a broader application of these words.

Our attitude toward God expresses itself in our attitude toward our fellow man. That which we do toward those about us is not a matter of indifference, but is the basis for God's judgment of our lives. Each of us must answer for the deeds done in the flesh whether they be good or evil. That is true even of the believer (II Cor. 5:10), whose salvation has already been determined by his faith in Christ.

Here in our lesson, however, the failure to do that which shows forth God's law of love is made the ground of eternal judgment. This is not because an act of kindness itself can be regarded as the ground of division, but because the failure to give it or do it reflects an attitude of heart toward our God and his Christ which is in reality a rejection of his way of salvation.

Judgment is thus a revelation of the attitude of the heart, which marks a man or woman as being either saved or lost. It may be possible to so becloud the thinking of our friends and neighbors that we may go through life looking something like a Christian, but when Christ judges, it will all be revealed.

Notice the importance of a proper attitude toward those who need our kindness and help. All too often the only concern of men and women is to look out for "number one" and let the rest of the world shift for itself.

Observe also that the Lord identifies himself with his brethren—what is done to and for them is counted as done to and for him. Compare the experience of Samuel (I Sam. 8:7) and of Paul (Acts 9:5). Touch God's people and you touch him. Fail them and you fail him. Serve them and you serve him.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
The subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, Sept. 15, was:

"SUBSTANCE"

The Golden Text was:
"Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation: the fear of the Lord is his treasure" (Isa. 33: 6).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible:

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. . . Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Heb. 11: 1, 3).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy:

or which matter could be made, for, as the Bible declares, without the Logos, the Aeon or Word of God, "was not anything made that was made." Spirit is the only substance, the invisible and indivisible infinite God . . . Truth, Life, and Love are substance, as the Scriptures use this word in Hebrews: "The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Spirit, the synonym of Mind, Soul, or God, is the only real substance" (pp. 335, 468, 598).

LOCK NO. 6 ON THE ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL at CHANNAHON

Let's go exploring into the Past by way of historical spots in Northern Illinois. OUR LANDMARKS in the current Service Bulletin will be a guide if you feel like seeking out some of these spots at a later date. However, you may travel to sixteen of them without even leaving your armchair. You may visit friendly old mills, lovely churches, and pause by the Illinois and Michigan Canal with its century-old locks and Aqueduct. You may make discoveries. We have a lighthouse light that "went under the earth" instead of "under the sea." The construction of one dwelling place was influenced by the curious combination of a cyclone and a barrel of flour. An inn of the romantic stage coach era was also the birthplace of a world-famous dancer. A tavern maintained two flourishing establishments—the tavern in front and a grocery in the rear. All sixteen landmarks are illustrated by John McKee.

The "About You and Your House" page stresses the lunch-box theme. The recipe page contains two sugar-savers—Quick Coffee Cake and Cottage Pudding.

"When You Play... Stay Away From Traffic" is the subject of the May school poster, being distributed to more than 38,000 classrooms in Illinois and Indiana by the Chicago Motor Club. The poster emphasizes pointedly one of the major causes of pedestrian fatalities. Instruction sheets accompanying the poster enable teachers to use the safety lessons to the best advantage for pupils of all ages in various localities.

Helium Gas
From the Greek "helios," meaning sun, where earthbound man first observed it in 1868 as a bright yellow band on the spectroscopic, helium gas takes its name. Near the turn of the present century it was discovered in an earth mineral, then identified as a gas and isolated. By 1905 it had been recognized as a component of natural gas in Kansas.

Gen. Del. Blue Island Ill

Following is a reprint from the Aug. 2nd issue of this paper, of a warning to Septic Tank owners, as issued by the Cook County Department of Health.

"Many owners of homes in rural areas dependent upon septic tanks and sub-surface seepage systems for disposal of sewage are unaware of the fact that septic tanks need to be cleaned.

"The action which takes place in a septic tank can only reduce the volume of the material which settles down to the bottom of the tank or which floats to the surface. When there is no longer room in the septic tank for more solids they are forced out into the seepage tiles. When this occurs the sewage breaks out onto the surface of the ground or causes backing up of the entire system. The septic tank should be inspected every summer and when the top scum and bottom sludge add up to twenty inches, the tank should be cleaned. The material from the tank should be placed on a field and plowed under or buried directly. Under no circumstances should it be dumped in a ditch or stream.

"Dr. Piszczek pointed out the danger against discharging the outflow contains disease bearing organisms."

Dog Breeds

"Pinscher," German for fox-terrier or English terrier, is the German breed which corresponds to the English terrier. The German boxer, believed to have originated in Germany back in the 16th century, is a fighter with a bulldog expression but the muscular body and long legs of a mastiff. It is said that when used as fighting dogs decades ago, two boxers would fight standing on hind legs and sparring with front legs. No doubt the term "boxer" grew out of this.

Rufe's Ramblings

The two freight engines on the Windy Mountain & Eastern have names just like ships and Pullman cars. That distinction was accorded them without the busting of a bottle of champagne—and it's not for me to say that anything else was broken, but the state law in them days said that no train of dead freight could be operated on Sunday. Now a stock train was different, and there was no reason why they could pick up a few loads of other stuff or set out some of the live stock, just so long as they held onto one load of live animals, and one steer fulfilled the requirements in every respect. So for years and years folks along the line would come to the depots and ask, "Where's old Buck going to meet old Ben today?" And in all due respect I will say that so long as that law was in effect the up freight and the down freight never failed to pull out of the respective terminals right on schedule, and the strange part of it is that while there was no stock law and the steers were allowed to roam the countryside at will they never failed to report at the termination of their week's layover in alternating points. Old Buck and Ben made their last trips—one way trips, long before their real values were known, so far as ration points go, but Buck and Ben still meet at some siding between Windy Mountain and Sandy Ford and it's not always a stock train they are pulling either.

(The following article is based on medical studies of the effectiveness of the Sister Elizabeth Kenny treatment for infantile paralysis.)

Médical Studies Back Sister Kenny Theory

Sister Elizabeth Kenny's demonstration of her treatment for infantile paralysis at Minneapolis General hospital aroused the interest of the medical profession and resulted in a five-year study of her theories.

The result of these studies and clinical observations by six eminent medical men is told in a report made in the August issue of The Journal Lancet, a national medical publication.

The Dr. Pohl report is based on the most comprehensive study to date of Miss Kenny's revolutionary treatment and the results of that treatment.

In The Journal Lancet, Dr. Pohl points out that his evaluation of the "Kenny concept and treatment is based" upon a study of 364 patients suffering from infantile paralysis in the acute stage who were admitted and treated at Elizabeth Kenny Clinic during the years 1940 through 1944.

Of the 364 patients 341 survive. "Upon completion of the treatment 16 per cent of the patients have extensive residual paralysis of one or more extremities but 84 per cent may be considered to have good recovery from the standpoint of muscle strength and ability to move the limbs," Dr. Pohl wrote.

He explains in his article that the cases studied were not mild ones but "were of average severity" in comparison with previous experience in the same hospital (Minneapolis General).

Remarkably Successful
"A patient may be a success from the standpoint of retaining good muscle power but the same patient definitely represents a failure of treatment if he suffers permanent crippling deformities in spite of his good muscle strength as was too frequently the case under orthodox management of the disease.

"On this basis the Kenny treatment proves to be remarkably successful as 95.5 per cent of the patients in this series appeared to have an assured further existence, free of cumbersome braces, grotesque deformities and awkward methods of locomotion.

The other 4.5 per cent (15 patients) are by no means helpless or "even necessarily crippled but are considered as having retained muscle weakness to such an extent as to prevent them from being fully independent. None have gross deformities."

Only 2.3 per cent or eight of the entire group of 341 wear braces. Crutches are used by only 3.4 per cent of the patients and 2.8 per cent use one cane.

"For the most part," Dr. Pohl adds, "the crutches are employed as a means of continuing to teach the patients good motor habits rather than as a means of support. Crutches are later displaced by a single cane in most patients or are discarded entirely. Gross deformities have been eliminated in all cases.

Surgery Unsuccessful
"One of the patients has required surgery to date and no indication has arisen in which surgery might materially improve the condition of any of the patients.

"None of the 341 patients, including the severely involved, have entered orthopedic hospitals, rest homes or institutions for the care of the crippled and chronically disabled."

Pointing out that orthopedic hospitals and schools for crippled children give an overall picture of the infantile paralysis situation in any community, Dr. Pohl presents figures in The Journal Lancet article to show the effect of the Kenny treatment on the number of admissions to the Michael Dowling School for Crippled Children, Minneapolis, during the years 1937, 1938 and 1939, prior to the time Miss Kenny began her work, and in 1940 through 1944.

From 1937 through 1939, Dr. Pohl said, 178 Minneapolis school children 14 years of age or under were afflicted with the disease and 57 or 32 per cent of them eventually were enrolled in Dowling school; 45 or 80 per cent of those admitted had gross deformities; 15 or 26 per cent of those admitted were required to wear braces, and 12 or 21 per cent of those admitted have had surgical operations.

From 1940 through 1944—the Kenny period—146 Minneapolis children 14 years of age or under were afflicted with the disease and placed under the management of the Kenny treatment.

None Deformed

None of the 146, Dr. Pohl reports, had to be enrolled in Dowling school; none had a deformity; none had to wear a brace, and none had to have surgical operations.

Dr. Don Henderson, head of the orthopedic department of the Mayo Clinic, in a letter to Miss Kenny commented on her concept of the disease and her treatment of it and said:

"I am fully convinced that your method offers the infantile paralysis patient more hope for complete recovery than any other method or treatment today."

At Rochester University the acid test of science was applied to Miss Kenny's theory that spasm does exist. By use of delicate electrical instruments university scientists proved Miss Kenny's theory and as a result that institution conferred upon the Australian nurse the degree of doctor of humane letters in recognition of her findings. New York university also conferred an honorary degree upon Miss Kenny.

Business Men's Committee Studies Election Frauds

In an outpouring of citizens determined to secure honest elections, which jammed Orchestra Hall Sept. 17 in the evening, it was made very plain that vote stealing and other fraudulent practices use to defeat the will of the electorate, have about reached their finish in Cook County. Long before the doors opened business men and women from all parts of Chicago and the surrounding towns began gathering in front of Orchestra Hall to greet the speakers of the evening and to get the programs for Victory in the greatest spontaneous uprising of Independent, Republican and Democratic voters ever gathered there for a single electoral purpose—that is, complete honesty at the polling places.

These men and women were not political hacks aligned with any group or faction. They came for one purpose only, to see to it that honesty at the polls, shall prevail on November 5.

This Business Men's Committee was founded six years ago by Henry Pope, Jr., and a number of business men who had come to the conclusion they did not know as much as they should about what went on at the polling places during an election. Upon investigation they soon discovered that if the citizens were not getting honest elections, it was because they had neglected to watch what was going on.

The meeting was addressed by Judge Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin and Congressman Clare E. Hoffman of Al-legan, Michigan.

Party Line Disappears but Neighbors Still 'Listen In'

CHEYENNE WELLS, COLO.—Another signpost in rural American living was threatened here when the party line gave way to a radio telephone hookup.

One consolation, however, is that the time-honored rural practice of "listening in" will survive the changeover to modern communication methods. It is still possible to pick up the receiver when a neighbor's ring sounds and "listen in" on the conversation, a habit which has brought relief from boredom and monotony to lonely farm women for generations.

An eight-party circuit, utilizing both short wave radio - telephone and standard wire, was turned over to eight ranchers in the eastern Colorado plains surrounding this little town for the first actual operation of the new equipment.

Officials of Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph company emphasized that the service still was experimental although under actual commercial conditions. It was installed here because company officials decided this is a typical plains community.

The new equipment is one of the plans by which the Bell system, with which the local company is affiliated, is seeking to extend service to one million more homes within the next few years.

The eight ranches using the new equipment vary in distance from 11 to 21 miles from the central office and are in a region without previous telephone or power lines.

Equipment at each ranch includes a receiver, 10-watt transmitter, telephone, two antennae and home power plant. Only the telephone is in view.

Ma, Pa and Baby Bush Tail Pose Acute Housing Problem

JEFFERSON CITY, MO.—Latest victim of the housing shortage is the bushy-tailed squirrel.

Growth in squirrel families and heavy lumbering operations in the state's forests have combined to result in an acute situation for man's bushy-tailed friends, Missouri conservationists report.

The tree-housing shortage is made even more desperate by the papa squirrel's insistence on continuing one of his age-old customs. It seems that when the female gives birth to young, the father is ousted from the tree to pace the ground and is allowed to return only when the youngsters have found homes of their own.

That means that every couple really needs three trees — one for the home, one for papa's bachelor apartment and one for the young to use when they are partially grown.

Lumbering operations to provide material for man's housing take only the older trees, leaving the young and cavity-less trees which are most unsuitable for squirrels.

Only solution advanced by conservationists is that nature groups plant "temporary" housing in areas where the tree-housing situation is most acute.

Camp Fire Girls Open Nationwide Membership Drive

NEW YORK.—With 360,000 members participating, the annual membership march of camp fire girls is underway throughout the country. The campaign will extend through November 30.

"America always has used the past to build for the future; it is a nation that looks to tomorrow," Dr. Bernice Baxter, national president, said in a statement urging local units to extend the benefits of the camp fire program to larger numbers of girls in the community.

"The youth of today, who will carry on the spirit of our nation, must be grounded and trained in those principles which make for better living, for it is youth who will decide whether we continue to build or whether we fall back to the past," Dr. Baxter continued.

In connection with the national campaign, local Camp Fire Girls units will hold special activities designed to interest non-members in aims of the organization. Special emphasis will be placed on events showing the program in action.

Backing the campaign, Tom C. Clark, attorney general, declared that Camp Fire Girls and other youth-serving agencies foster health and character-building programs which are "the first line of attack" in combating juvenile delinquency.

War Searches Recalled as Derelict Drydock Hunted

NEW YORK.—In the most intensive sea search in the Atlantic since the end of the war, the coast guard launched a hunt for a partially submerged derelict floating drydock capable of sinking a ship the size of the Queen Mary.

The navy drydock originally slipped from a navy tug in heavy seas about 330 miles off Norfolk, Va., and broke in two parts.

After one section was sighted, carrier based planes dropped 500 pound bombs on the target, scoring two direct hits but failing to sink the derelict drydock. A coast guard cutter armed with TNT demolition mines then launched a new search.

Coast guard planes and vessels and a navy tug were searching in another sector for the second section of the drydock.

Diary of 46 Years Ago Points Way for Present

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — Mary Condit-Smith, a young Washington society girl, visiting diplomatic friends in China, and a 'leven-year-old boy in a little town on the Erie Canal both were keeping diaries at the turn of the century.

Mary, alone in her room in the American legation in Peking on June 11, 1900, slipped on her pink silk dressing gown, sat down and wrote:

Baukhage

"The telegraph was broken last night. We have no more communication with the outside world; our world is this dangerous Peking."

That same day, though it was really the day before, according to the strange tricks Old Sol plays as he pushes the clock around while he marches westward and paradoxically reaches the Far East—that same day, Monday, June 11, a boy in the fifth grade of the High street school painfully inscribed this entry in his book:

"It rained this A. M. Two more weeks and we'll be free from this School of Misery." (The next day it is of record that he broke the crank of his "wheel"—bicycle to you.)

The boy's name appears at the head of this column and what he wrote isn't important, but just 46 years later he was to read Mary's diary. She had gone to her reward long since but not until her diary became a book and she had become Mrs. Hooker, a colonel's lady.

White Man's Prestige Slipped to Low

As I read this fascinating story, told in simple, boarding-school English, those awful days when the foreign colony in Peking lived in the daily horror of massacre during the Boxer rebellion, became very real.

Today the fires of civil war are spreading in China. Voices are being raised, demanding that our marines be withdrawn. American prestige has fallen almost as low as it was when Mary Hooker in her diary told the dramatic story of the Boxer Rebellion—that moment in China's history when Americans, along with all foreigners reached their nadir. History repeats.

The Empress Tzuhsi, a reactionary, encouraged the activities of the Boxers and other groups whose chief purpose was to cleanse China of the "foreign devils." It is only fair to say that China had passed through a period during which the occidental powers had exploited her to the hilt.

Attacks on foreigners, especially missionaries, began in 1899, but as Mary Hooker records, "the diplomats and people in general put these things down to the usual spring riots which yearly seized Peking."

By June and July of 1900, however, the foreigners found themselves besieged in Peking. As late as June 7 Mary's diary reports:

"Mr. Pethick . . . forty years a resident of China and an intimate friend of half the political leaders, knowing their weaknesses by heart, urges the minister to state to Washington the situation as it is, but all to no avail."

Three days later, as I mentioned, the foreign colony "had no communication with the outside world."

The next day's entry states: "Such intense excitement! This afternoon the Japanese Chancellor of the Legation went down to the railway station in the official legation car to see if there was any sign of troops. Returning by the principal gate, he was seized by the Imperial (Chinese) troops, dismembered and cut to pieces."

Eagerly Awaited Arrival of Troops

From then on the entries become even more exciting . . . twenty of our marines have been sent by an officer to guard the big Methodist Mission . . . the Russian secretary . . . has figures at the ends of his fingers about the number of troops Russia can land in Tien-Tsin . . . are they trying to prepare us for a Russian coup d'etat?

Each day the arrival of foreign troops was awaited. On June 17 the entry reads:

"Just one week ago today we got the telegram that the combined forces of England, the United States, France, Japan, etc. . . had left to go to the relief of the legations in Peking . . . when the time comes that the American and Russian legations can no longer hold out, the British legation will be the stage for the terrible last act."

The Roman Catholic church was only one of many burned, and the converts and their families in the vicinity slaughtered.

"In some cases," says the diary, "the Christians thought it better to be roasted in their houses than try to escape." (She herself had decided that she might as well be massacred in her pink silk dressing gown with a pink bow at her neck as in her golf clothes.)

On the 19th of June, the Chinese government offered to give legation members their passports and escort them and their families to the port. There was a division of opinion as to whether to trust the Chinese. In the evening the German minister started to confer a second time on the question when he was murdered in the streets.

The situation grows worse.

Dead Piled

Around Ramparts

A bullet knocks off the headpiece of a baby's crib.

All the women are sewing sandbags.

The Dutch and Austrian legations burn.

On July 1: "There are so many dead dogs, horses and Chinese lying in heaps all around the defended lines, but too far for us to bury or burn them."

They used the dead horses closer by, however: "The . . . mess has an invariable menu. At breakfast, rice, tea and jam; at tiffin, rice and horse; at dinner, rice, horse and jam."

With the privations and fear of the Boxers grew the suspicion and distrust of the members of the foreign missions of each other. Russians and English hated each other; Americans were the buffers. Racial ructions have no date lines. Mary Hooker notes:

"The dislike of the Russians for the British is so cordial that it is only equalled by the feeling the British entertain toward them. Our compound joins the Russians, and they love us and we love them in as strong a fashion as they hate their English neighbors on their other side."

And so pretty Mary Hooker wrote history. . . .

But it was more than history. It was drama. It was tragedy. Just look over her shoulder once again:

"July 9 . . . day before yesterday, the Austrian Charge d'Affaires was shot at the French legation. . . . At first we kept a record of the dead or badly wounded . . . but now they come in so often we cease to note the exact number. . . ."

"July 16 . . . I was en route to the hospital carrying a pot of coffee to the doctors and nurses when some soldiers passed me, carrying a rough litter, bearing Captain Strouts (the British commanding officer) mortally wounded."

Then July 16: "It is discussed quietly by men that they will certainly kill their wives when that time comes (to make a final stand). God grant it never may! Apropos of this, I have in my pocket a small pistol loaded with several cartridges, to use if the worst happens. A Belgian secretary stole it from the armoury for me—in case you need it, mademoiselle."

Then finally this note on August 15, when the Chinese were closing in on the improvised fortifications manned by lord and flunky, soldier and civilian making their last stand . . . "a veritable ring of flame on all sides of the defenses."

And then! — "Through that racket that was around us all night, we could faintly hear the unmistakable sound of the foreign guns of our troops."

That page of history, let us hope, will not be repeated.

Sugar Shortage Remains Acute

WASHINGTON.—No general improvement in the sugar supply situation is possible until the 1947 Caribbean crops, particularly the Cuban and Puerto Rican output, begin to move to market in large volume about six months from now, the agriculture department reports.

Chances that supplies will increase sufficiently to permit abandonment of consumer rationing next year appear "rather slim," officials declare.

The forecast was made in connection with announcement that 1,187,000 short tons of sugar will be allocated for civilian production in the October-December quarter. The figure compares with an allot-

Means Devised To Halt Further Lags in Housing

HOUSING:

Fear New Obstacle

Having trimmed commercial construction and tightened allocation of materials to speed up the veterans' emergency housing program, Housing Expediter Wilson W. Wyatt feared a prospective labor shortage as a new obstacle to the rapid erection of dwellings.

Revealing his apprehensions in his August report on the vet housing situation, Wyatt indicated that the government would strive to head off the latest bogeyman with an intensive recruiting and apprentice training program.

Despite a pickup in new building in July, Wyatt disclosed in his report, the emergency housing program is lagging behind the announced goal of 1,200,000 homes and apartments for this year. During the first seven months of 1946, 607,100 new dwellings were started and 287,100 completed.

AUTO OUTPUT:

Hits Lag

In calling a press conference in Detroit, Mich., C. E. Wilson, president of General Motors corporation, presented the company's case against both the government and workers for the serious lag in auto production.

Pointing out that G.M. had turned out only 400,000 cars and trucks in the year following V-J Day instead of the 1,400,000 scheduled, Wilson charged the Truman administration with having attempted to appease labor unions by taking the lid off wages while at the same time stating that price increases were unnecessary. As a result, manufacturers were "put in the nutcracker," he averred.

THIS IS THE HOUSE! . . . Out at Lemont, Ill., a house is rising which is different than the house that Jack built in the nursery rhyme, because much of the work is being done by a couple of Janes. Mrs. Joseph Gorski, center, is laying brick on the new family home, assisted by willing friends.

Although G.M. has 88,000 more employees on its payroll than in 1941, production is about half, Wilson said. Tests on relative jobs have shown that worker productivity is about 80 per cent of the pre-war rate. Refusal of employees to extend themselves, a high absenteeism rate, inexperience and a large turnover partly due to the ease in collecting unemployment compensation all have contributed to the inefficiency, Wilson declared.

VFW:

Ask Vet Aid

Adoption of resolutions calling for increased benefits to World War I vets and satisfaction of domestic needs first before providing for those of other nations highlighted the Veterans of Foreign Wars national encampment in Boston, Mass.

Congress was urged to authorize pensions for World War I vets for old age and disability, with payments made for the latter regardless of whether the disabilities resulted from military duty. Such payments are made to Spanish-American war vets.

The government was asked to halt shipments of food to former enemy countries as long as any American was unable to obtain sufficient food stuffs to maintain proper health. A protest was raised against deliveries of grain abroad at the expense of U. S. brewers while beer was being imported from England, Belgium and Holland.

Other resolutions called for the trial of Yugoslav airmen who shot down American fliers; support of the Anglo-American recommendations for admission of 100,000 Jews to Palestine, and condemnation of the practice of awarding actors combat awards for troop entertainment.

NAVY:

To Provide Comforts

One could almost have heard the rattle down in Davey Jones' locker when the navy announced that it was air-conditioning the new cruisers, Salem and Newport News, to determine the best kind of equipment for eventually cooling all of its ships.

In announcing the navy's plans for providing additional comfort for crews on the bounding main, Vice-Adm. Edward L. Cochrane, chief of the bureau of ships, emphasized that air-conditioning had proved invaluable in boosting morale and fighting efficiency in combat.

Various types of new air-conditioning equipment will be used in the tests in the new 17,000-ton cruisers, with the cool air transmitted into all living and working compartments save machinery areas where the heat is too intense. Simplified coils will be shockproof and easily cleaned, it was said.

In pipes or papers, there's a rich bonus of smoking comfort and joy in

"TONGUE-EASY" PRINCE ALBERT

Packs better in pipes. "I've smoked Prince Albert for 10 years," says Walter Hickson, above. "So easy on the tongue—so good to taste. That crimp cut of P.A. packs better in a pipe too—draws light and easy—a joy right down to the bottom of the bowl!"

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.
Winston-Salem, N. C.

Rolls better in papers

"Believe me," says Ralph Pearson, above, "that crimp cut feature of Prince Albert is right for rolling. Shapes up straight and firm. Smokes right too—mild and yet plenty of good rich tobacco taste. No other tobacco like P.A."
